

ABSTRACT

A microelectromechanical system is disclosed that uses a stiff tether between an actuator assembly and a lever that is interconnected with an appropriate substrate such that a first end of the lever may move relative to the substrate, depending upon the 5 direction of motion of the actuator assembly. Any appropriate load may be interconnected with the lever, including a mirror for any optical application.